The Rutgers College Glee and Mandolin Clubs were in town on Tuesday evening under the auspices of the First Church Guild, and were successful in entertaining their audience for an evening with up to date songs of the university club, which are always so irresistible to young and old. The extreme youthfulness of many of the band of singers and performers did not in any way detract from the quality of the entertainment. The dignity of gowns and musical accompaniment judiciously with certain musical medleys with which the valets occasionally resounded, but they held their audience intent with the drollery and musical skill for which they are noted, and on leaving the stage with the College yell, they left the impression that an evening with the College boys is highly sport.

Each number was heartily received. Refreshments were served after the entertainment.

Abel Baker & Son's Announcement. The subscribers have this to say to their old customers as well as new ones, that there is no necessity for their going out of town to purchase their groceries, as for each we will guarantee to give as good goods as can be bought anywhere for the same money. Commencing Monday, February 1, 1897, we will make reduction on the prices of our goods to meet the necessities of the times, on a strictly cash basis, and we will guarantee satisfaction or money refunded. We will still maintain the reputation we have built up of having the best goods to be had in the market, as well as dealing fairly and justly with every one. Greater care than ever will be taken in the taking and filling of all orders. Thinking our friends for the confidence they have placed in us in the past twenty years, and trusting for a continuance of the same, we remain, Very Respy.,

The Anderson Homicide.

The trial of Mrs. Gertrude Cregier upon the charge of murder was set down for Wednesday morning in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, before Justice Debus. There was a crowded courtroom, but the spectators were disappointed in the abrupt ending of the trial, the prosecution and counsel for the accused having agreed to accept a plea of non vult to a charge of murder in the second degree. When this result was announced and Judge Debus had asked Prosecutor Crane what he had to say about the acceptance of the plea he declared that under the circumstances he felt as though the plea as offered should be accepted. He had grave doubts, he said, as to the ability of the State to prove murder of the first degree, but at the same time he was sure that it would not be difficult to secure a verdict in the second degree. That being the case, he said, he thought it would be wise to accept the plea and by so doing save the expense of a trial.

"This woman," continued Mr. Crane, "lived with the deceased for about three years, having previously been married and divorced from her husband, Cregier. During the time that she lived with Anderson, the deceased, they had frequent quarrels, more or less bitter. On the morning of the shooting she prepared breakfast, but Anderson went away without eating anything, and she ate alone. Anderson returned to the house after the shooting, and she asked her roughly why she was in such a hurry and why she had not waited until breakfast with him. They then had some words, and she declared that she was tired of the way he was treating her. He swore at her and she swore at him.

"Then he took hold of her, using considerable force and twisting her around the small room in which they were quarrelling. The fact that he used her roughly and with much force was shown by the examination of her body by the physician Chapman after her arrest and commitment. The doctor found many marks and bruises on her. Well after wrenching herself free from Anderson the prisoner went up a small flight of stairs to another room and got a revolver. She went back to the room where Anderson was seated and the moment that she reached the bottom of the stairs she fired a shot at him. The bullet struck his heart and he died almost instantly. Now, with the evidence in our possession, and we have all that is obtainable there, it is doubt that in the shooting there was that deliberation which must be shown in order to secure a conviction of murder of the first degree. It seems from the evidence that the prisoner's intention was to do great bodily harm with a deadly weapon. That resulting in death, is murder in the second degree."

"The Court," said Judge Debus, "in view of these statements, is willing to accept the plea of non vult to murder in the second degree. Mr. Prosecutor, you please see that the record is made in accordance with the statute. Let the prisoner be remanded."

Mrs. Cregier, who had been standing all the time, was taken back to the jury room and a few minutes later, Warden Boyet and Constable Rommel escorted her out of the courtroom. To avoid the crowd they took the woman out of the side door, and then the Warden brought her back to the jail, going up Springfield avenue and across Norfolk street. Before she was taken away her lawyers asked the Court to fix a sentence day, and a week from Saturday was decided upon. Mr. Henry said he wished to present at that time circumstances in the case in mitigation of the woman's crime.

Swindling Talent Recognized. "The other day a well dressed fellow came in here and ordered a meal consisting of 80 cents," said a restaurant proprietor. "Before he was ready to leave another man strolled in, sat at the same table and ordered a meal consisting of 80 cents. When the first man finished his meal, he calmly picked up the newcomer's 10 cent check, paid a dime at the cashier's desk and walked out. Of course we were a howl from the restaurant with the man who had taken an 80 cent check had been left for him to settle, and we could do nothing but accept 10 cents from him and pocket a net profit of 70 cents."

"Yesterday I happened to be behind the cashier's desk when one of the same fellows came up, passed over a 10 cent check and laid down a dime. I immediately handed the cashier the dime and said, 'You've a cigar on me. I added, handing out a box of the best Havanas. "The fellow looked at me quizzically for a moment, extended his hand for the cigar and said: 'You're a scoundrel and no mistake. Thanks I'll just take one for Billy Tom. And he did.' Chicago Times-Herald.

The Bishop and the Actor. Speaking of Mr. Hare recalls a story about the famous actor which is brand new. A hotel gentleman, whose name is a household word in both New York and London, wrote to Mr. Hare the other day inviting him and Mrs. Hare to dine with him Sunday night. By the same mail the wife of the actor had received an invitation from Mrs. Potter, asking them to meet the Hares on Sunday. In this note the hostess made an explanation. "I know that it is against the bishop's principles to dine out on Sunday night," she wrote, "but I am hoping that he will waive his principles on this occasion, because Sunday night is the only night on which Mr. Hare is unemployed."

The next day the answer came. It regretted sincerely that the bishop and Mrs. Hare could not accept the invitation, because both of them were most anxious to meet Mr. and Mrs. Hare; "but," continued the note sententious, "I must visit the ruins of Palmyra, Babee, Babylon, Nineveh, the place where once stood the tower of Babel, and has organized caravans to travel through Persia."—Philadelphia Call.

He Hasn't Read It. If one of the stories told at the last meeting of the Society For Political Study is true, it is indeed time that women had a share in the lawmaking of the nation. The story pertained, of course, to the abolition treaty, which was being so earnestly discussed, and was as follows: A number of men were talking about the treaty in a down town club the other night. It was noticeable that one of the men, a well known politician, whose name has already been mentioned as a possible member of the cabinet, kept silent. "What do you think about it?" one of the others at length asked him. "Well, to tell the truth," said the cabinet possibility, "though without the slightest hesitation, I haven't read the thing yet."—New York Sun.

Monesty Rebuked. After a late character had passed me several times without asking for my fare I touched his arm and gave him a nickel. A few minutes later as I left the car I found him on the rear platform alone. "Excuse me," he said, "but I am a conductor myself, you don't think him up. He doesn't want you to do it. If I miss a passenger, the chances are all against me that I will notice it; I kept the fellow himself. But when he rushes up to pay a fare I have missed everybody's notice the fact that I have been negligent, and if there is a 'spotter' about I lose my job. The next time save your nickel; it may help me save my position."—Chicago Times.

SHORT NEWS STORIES.

The Soft Answer—Swindling Talent Recognized—The Bishop and the Actor—Monesty Rebuked.

A humorous incident happened at the second regiment's armory in Chicago a short time ago, in which Dr. George Frank Lydston, the surgeon of the regiment, cleverly turned an unintentional insult into a funny climax. It was meeting night, and the doctor and other officers were happily chatting in one of the bedrooms that looked out on the street. A pitcher of ice water sat on a table near by. There was also a glass of water, which the doctor picked up and drank deeply and threw the rest of the liquid out of the window. A passing pedestrian caught it right in the face and flew into a rage of anger.

"You," shouted out the pedestrian at the window, making the atmosphere sulphurous. "What's the matter with you, man?" asked the doctor, with some surprise, poking his head out to ascertain the cause of the raving jargon beneath.

"The matter?" roared the man. "—What'd you throw that water in my face for?" demanded the man below vehemently.

"Why, my dear sir, what did you expect to do with that hard time?" humorously responded the doctor. "Drop around when times get better, and I'll throw whisky 'into your face.'" He concluded.

At this reply the man below forgot his grievance in the enjoyment of the humor, said not another word and moved on. The doctor, however, laughing until himself—Chicago Times-Herald.

A NOTABLE CONVENTION.

The National American Woman Suffrage Association met in Washington. The twenty-sixth annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association will be held in Washington at Metzger's Music Hall Feb. 15-16, inclusive.

The government's recognition of women in the board of managers for the World's Columbian exposition, the world's congress of representative women, the greatest confederation of women ever assembled—the participation of women in the entire series of world's congresses, the gaining of woman suffrage in Colorado, give to our demand for political equality for women unprecedented prestige in the world of thought.

From this vantage ground let us assemble in our twenty-sixth annual convention to work for the realization of an ideal republic, with the assurance of success in the near future.
